EMPLOYMENT HISTORY

Professor (Assistant to Associate to Full), English

University of Louisiana

August 1999 - Present (40 hours/week)

Led development of new courses and new research projects into the mixed zone of online and offline cultures focused on the role of stories in the transmission and reception of ideas.

Responsibilities

TASK: Lead the design and delivery of courses for undergraduate and graduate students (including plans, materials, in-person and online activities, and assessments).

Achievements

- Developed an entirely new undergraduate course focused on digital culture and its instantiation in a variety of social media. Course premiered Fall 2020 with online modules, activities, and discussions.
- Developed a new undergraduate course focused on text analytics using computational approaches to data collection, collation, analysis, and visualization. Course premieres Spring 2024.
- Developed a new graduate course focused on narrative studies, opening the possibility for computational approaches to texts at the graduate level: students prepared studies of everything from Medieval ballads to online crypto-puzzles.
- Updated courses to focus on the study of vernacular culture as the study of information flows containing traditional materials like legends.
- Developed a mixed approach toolset, including traditional “close” reading practices as well as algorithmic “distant” reading methods.

TASK: Develop institutional capabilities and infrastructure to handle digital/digitized data.

Achievements

- Established a digitization program for analog archival materials: PI for external funding from Grammy Foundation.
- Funded and established a digital humanities lab for faculty and students to examine and produce digital materials and analysis: PI for external funding from Louisiana Board of Regents.
- Contributed to Ethnographic Video for Instruction and Analysis Digital Archive (Indiana University / University of Michigan / Andrew Mellon Foundation) with deposition and analysis of 10 hours of video on Cajun and Creole cultural practices.

TASK: Prepare, publish, and present papers in professional forums.

Achievements

- Published 9+ studies on computational approaches to discourse as found in social media, traditional media, and unmediated (face-to-face) interactions as well as an additional 6+ studies of network effects in both offline and online communities/groups, including one book-length study.
- Presented ideas and methods at the intersection of the humanities, social sciences, and data science and statistics with papers given at the Digital Humanities conference, the Society for Data Science and Statistics, and the American Folklore Society with additional presentations in other institutional and organizational contexts.
- Invited to lead workshops on text/cultural analytics focused on statistical methods and network studies.
- Participated in national/international workshops and seminars focused on opportunities in the computational study of complex cultural artifacts and events: NEH Seminar on Network Studies in the Humanities (2010), UVA Speaking in Code Symposium (2013), and NSF Cultural Analytics Long Program (2016-2018).

TASK: Serve as an advisor/consultant in online information/media implementations and practices.

Achievements

- Served as advisor/consultant on data science initiatives involving complex cultural materials to College of the Holy Cross, Amherst College, and Smith College—including suggesting textbook on networks focused on matrices at Amherst.
- Chaired implementation of new communication strategies in the face of changing information landscapes for the American Folklore Society: led AFS website transition team

- in the development of a dynamic website during Phase 1 and now member of social media outreach committee during Phase 2.
- Revised departmental materials with a focus on inclusion of social media outlets to increase visibility and outreach capabilities for folklore program.
 - Collaborated with Evangeline Council of the Boy Scouts of America in creation of digital archive of Council's activities, which led to development of materials for Swamp Trek high adventure camp, including citizen science initiatives.
 - Analyzed web search results and user paths for commercial websites and provided reports that included both executive summaries as well as detailed information for private businesses.

Professor, Social Informatics

Army Management Staff College

December 2022 – January 2023 (40 hours/week)

Part of a team of experts brought in to design and deliver a course on multi-domain operations and information advantage as well as develop materials for adjacent courses and schools (e.g., CGSS) and publish in areas of expertise.

Responsibilities

TASK: Design and implement course focused on Army multi-domain operations and enterprise business transformation for senior leaders.

Achievements

- Conducted multiple iterations of this course to hundreds of senior US Army Leaders.
- Collaborated with design of overall curriculum of CESL-IA and created social information systems curriculum and materials. Extended discussion to include possible roles of AI/ML and NLP in information operations.

TASK: Publish materials internally and externally that map the role of social information systems and emerging technologies within both established and emergent Army doctrine.

Achievements

- Published Laudun et al 2021 (see below).
- Selected as review team member for Army TRADOC: ADP 3-13.

TASK: Collaborate with faculty in AMSC and adjacent units (e.g., CGSS, SAMS, etc.) to develop curricula and materials focused on social information systems and emerging technologies.

Achievements

- Produced and reviewed materials for Intermediate and Advanced Courses.
- Participated in a number of curriculum design and review workshops focused on Intermediate and Advanced courses.
- Worked with AMSC, SAMS, and CGSS faculty who refine concepts focused on information flows on social media and elsewhere.

Associate Director

Center for Louisiana Studies (University of Louisiana at Lafayette)

August 2003 – August 2005 (20 hours/week via release from departmental duties)

TASK: Lead a matrixed team (local and distant) of freelancers, staff, graduate students, and undergraduate students (with diverse expertise and experience) focused on archiving, publishing, and creating public programming.

Achievements

- Served as primary contact for Archives of Cajun and Creole Folklore, including assessment of needs during construction and post-construction amelioration efforts.

- Developed and deployed digitization program, including acquiring funding for software, hardware, and personnel in order to stabilize the Archive's inventory.
- Researched and briefed director and staff, on current standards in digital preservation technologies and methods.
- Designed database for cultural materials and oversaw Phase 1 of planned two-phase development—briefed university computing services on hardware and software requirements for Phase 2 before turning the project over, with documentation, for implementation.
- Supervised small teams of undergraduate and graduate students focused on either personal or Center-focused research projects.
- Assisted National Park Service in documenting and assessing damage to facilities after Hurricane Katrina.
- Collaborated with local community leaders in the development of historical and cultural facilities in region, often coordinating efforts with local tourism boards and interested/invested others.
- Initiated digital documentation program for mixed use initiative focused on preservation and promotion of local culture, artifacts, and events (PI on startup grant and Co-PI on the follow-up grant).

Associate Instructor

African American Studies (Indiana University)

August 1997–June 1999 (20 hours/week)

Graduate teaching assistant to a 150-person lecture course with individual discussion sections. Prepared and led discussion section activities. Worked as a team to prepare and grade exams and to collect feedback from one of the most diverse classes on campus.

Assistant Director

Kelley Executive Partners (Indiana University School of Business)

June 1995 – August 1997 (40 hours/week)

TASK: Assess executive development needs of Fortune 500 companies and designed/coordinated appropriate educational programming to facilitate individual and organizational success.

Achievements

- Served as primary contact with corporations interested either in collaborative or custom programming — this included everything from initial contact to post-program assessment of involved individuals and groups.
- Revised and expanded the Global Partnership for Executive Development, a group of international corporations focused on strategic dimensions of growth with an especial focus on China: the program consisted of three weeks, one in the U.S.A, one in Europe, and one in China, with a program of lectures and activities designed to make upper-level managers and lower-level executives able to assess joint venture partnership possibilities. Final week was an on-the-ground exercise, traveling to an active joint venture and interviewing both Western and Chinese managers and staff. Organizations included: AT&T, Lucent, GM, Renault, Royal Dutch Shell, France Telecom, Hong Kong Telecom, among others.
- Designed and developed custom programs, including a portfolio of programs for Allison Engine which had recently been acquired by Rolls Royce (the aircraft engine manufacturer), coordinating local efforts at AE's HQ with A.T. Kearney and EDS consultants who were overseeing the overall integration. Routinely met with junior and senior partners as well as AE executives and staff both to be briefed on changes in requirements as well as to brief team on current actions based on requirements.

Associate Instructor
